2022-23 Season Outlook: Last season was a great opportunity for us to see what strategies worked and didn't work on and off the field. This upcoming season, we plan on utilizing everything that worked to build an even stronger team. We expect to have better practices with strict agendas to follow, build better team morale by having more socials, and fundraise more often to have more money within the team. We had a major turn of events for our team last season - our team placed in the top 3 in our conference. So as a result, we now have expectations to uphold of our players (new and returning) because we know what we are capable of.

Manager Quote: We are looking forward to the new season to see new players and almost all of our returning players. We are extremely excited to get back out on the field and compete against other teams.

2022-23 Season Outlook:

After making it to the 2022 College World Series for the first time in school history, the Hornets are looking to build on last season's success with its first Pacific Central conference title as well as making it back to Georgia with stronger showing on the national stage. This year's team will be led by sophomore sensation and team co-MVP pitcher/third base player Mia Perry, co-MVP utility and senior Savannah Troyer, sophomore catcher Carley Isola, and senior first base Samantha Netherton. Additionally, the Hornets are adding 3 junior college transfer's center fielder in Jayden Isola, infielder's Ariana Riojas and Grace Rosebrook, and a talented group of freshmen recruiting class to the roster all of whom are expected to contribute.

Sacramento State is seeking to return the top 20 Rawlings national NCSA ranking and show that they are one of the best teams in the country. The Hornets will play a 2022-23 regular season with a trio of non-conference games against Pacific North members Boise State, Gonzaga, and Oregon, as well as travel to Los Angeles to play Pacific South contender UCLA. The Hornets expect to battle UC Davis and Cal for the conference crown.
